

19th Century Baseball in Chicago: Images Of Baseball

The Early Days of Baseball in Chicago

Baseball has a long and storied history in Chicago, dating back to the 19th century. The first organized baseball game in the city was played in 1857, and the first professional team, the Chicago White Stockings, was founded in 1870. The White Stockings, later renamed the Cubs, quickly became one of the most successful teams in the country, winning several National League pennants and World Series championships.

The 19th century was a time of great change for baseball in Chicago. The game evolved from a simple pastime to a professional sport, and new rules and regulations were constantly being developed. The popularity of baseball also soared during this time, and it quickly became one of the most popular sports in the city.
