The Birth of Wildfire Management

The history of wildfire firefighting in Oregon is inseparable from the history of the state itself. As settlers poured into the region in the 19th century, they brought with them a disregard for the natural world that led to rampant deforestation and increased fire risk. In response, the Oregon Forest Service was established in 1911, marking the dawn of organized wildfire management in the state.

Early firefighting efforts were often chaotic and ineffective, with firefighters relying primarily on hand tools and rudimentary equipment. But as the threat of wildfires grew, so too did the need for a more sophisticated approach. The development of the lookout tower system in the 1920s and the advent of aerial firefighting in the 1940s transformed the way wildfires were detected and suppressed.

The Heroes of the Forest

Behind the statistics and historical accounts lie countless stories of heroism and sacrifice. "Oregon Wildland Firefighting History" introduces us to the brave men and women who have risked their lives to protect Oregon's communities.
