Servants

The Promise Keepers believe that men are called to be servants. This means that they are to put the needs of others before their own. They are to be willing to help out their wives, children, and neighbors. They are also to be willing to serve their community and their church.

Soldiers

The Promise Keepers also believe that men are called to be soldiers. This means that they are to be willing to fight for what is right. They are to be willing to stand up for their families, their community, and their country. They are also to be willing to fight against evil and injustice.

Godly Men

Finally, the Promise Keepers believe that men are called to be godly men. This means that they are to live their lives according to the teachings of Jesus Christ. They are to be honest, faithful, and loving. They are also to be good role models for their children and for other men.

Criticisms of the Promise Keepers

The Promise Keepers have been criticized for their conservative views on gender roles and homosexuality. The group has been accused of promoting a narrow view of masculinity that is harmful to women and gay men. The Promise Keepers have also been criticized for their focus on personal morality and their neglect of social justice issues.

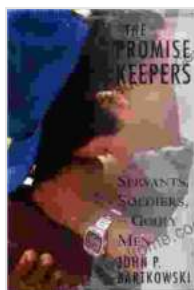

Defenses of the Promise Keepers

The Promise Keepers have defended their views on gender roles and homosexuality, arguing that they are based on the teachings of the Bible. The group has also defended their focus on personal morality, arguing that it is necessary for men to become better husbands, fathers, and leaders. The Promise Keepers have also pointed to their work in helping men to overcome addictions and improve their relationships with their wives and children as evidence of their positive impact on society.
