Early Struggles and Triumphs

The ALP faced formidable challenges from the outset. The disease was shrouded in stigma and misinformation, and fear and discrimination ran rampant. Legal obstacles compounded the struggle for affected individuals, who faced barriers to employment, healthcare, and housing.

Undeterred, the ALP team tirelessly advocated for their clients, challenging discriminatory practices through strategic litigation and policy advocacy. One landmark victory came in 1987 when they successfully prevented the city of Philadelphia from barring people with HIV/AIDS from working in food service.

National Impact

As the ALP's reputation grew, it expanded its reach beyond Philadelphia, becoming a national force for change. The organization spearheaded efforts to secure federal funding for AIDS research and treatment programs, played a pivotal role in the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), and advocated for comprehensive healthcare coverage for people with HIV/AIDS.

Changing Lives, One Case at a Time

Beyond the headlines, the ALP made a tangible difference in the lives of countless individuals. They provided legal assistance to those denied employment, healthcare, and housing solely because of their HIV status. They fought for the rights of children orphaned by AIDS, ensuring they had access to education and support.

Each case represented a victory, not only for the individual client but for the broader community, as it challenged societal biases and paved the way for greater equity and inclusion.

The Legacy of Advocacy

Today, the AIDS Law Project continues to be a beacon of hope for people living with HIV/AIDS. Through its unwavering advocacy, the organization has secured countless legal victories, protecting the rights of affected individuals and creating a more just and equitable society.

The ALP's legacy extends far beyond the courtroom. It has fostered a community of support and empowerment, offering legal counsel, case management, and peer counseling to those in need. Through education and awareness programs, it has helped to dispel stigma and promote understanding of HIV/AIDS.
